1. How to Use This Sheet

This is the phone sheet. Every price Mike Builds quotes, on one page, ready to read out loud from a truck cab. The numbers are fixed. There is no haggling, no hidden second price, and no phrase that starts with "it depends." When someone asks what a website costs, the answer takes one breath: five hundred to eight hundred, flat, and I build it before you pay a dime.

Some of these prices are already printed on the live site - the plumber ladder, the realtor packs, the automation parts. Those never move. Two offers are new and live only on this sheet until the site catches up: the Automation Fix at five hundred flat, and the Care Plan at ninety-nine a month. Nothing here contradicts a number a customer may have already read online.

Three rules for quoting. One: quote fast, quote once, then stop talking. Two: never discount - if the number is too high, take something out of the job instead of money out of the price. Three: every quote ends the same way the site does - call or text, a human picks up. The phone number is the close. (410) 575-4192.

2. The Offer Map

Six things get sold. Four are published on the site; two are phone-quoted from this sheet. The map below is the single source of truth - when a number changes anywhere, it changes here first, then on the site, then in the flyers. Keeping one map is what makes fixed prices survivable: a price you have to remember is a price you will eventually contradict.

Read the table by column, not by row. The "Published" column tells you where the customer can verify the number themselves - which is a strength, not a leak. A price a plumber can check on your website at 9 p.m. is a price that does not need a salesman standing next to it.

Offer	Price	Published	Who buys it
The Website (one page)	$500 / $650 / $800 flat	mikebuilds.tech/plumber	Plumbers, HVAC, electricians
Content packs	$297/mo or $497/mo	mikebuilds.tech/realtor	Real estate agents
Automation parts	$300 - $400 once each	mikebuilds.tech/automation	Any local business
The 24/7 Receptionist	$297/mo	mikebuilds.tech/automation	Busy one-truck shops
The Automation Fix	$500 flat	This sheet only	New clients, phone quote
The Care Plan	$99/mo	This sheet only	Website clients, at delivery

Table 1. The complete price map, as of October 2026.

3. Offer One - The Website

One page. Built fast. The customer's phone number where thumbs can reach it. This is the offer that opens every conversation with a tradesman, because it answers the question they actually have: "when someone searches me at midnight, what do they find?" A one-page site is not a smaller version of a big website - it is a bigger version of a business card, and it works while they sleep.

$500	3-5	100%
FIRST CLIENT, FLAT	DAYS TO LIVE	OWNED BY THE CLIENT

The hook is the order of operations: the site gets built first, then Mike sends a 60-second video of it running on a phone, and the client pays only if they like what they see. No deposit, no contract, no risk on their side. That single move removes the trust objection before it is raised - the proof arrives before the invoice does.

The ladder is deliberate and it is printed on the site: first client five hundred, second six fifty, third eight hundred. The price climbs on purpose - the first one sells at a friend price because there is no track record yet. When quoting, name the client's rung honestly and let the climb work as urgency: the number only goes up.

Rung	Price	What is in it
First client	$500	One page, tap-to-call number, hours, service list, service area, the photos they already have on their phone.
Second	$650	Everything above, plus a before-and-after gallery, review quotes, and a Google Maps pin.
Third	$800	The works: everything above, plus written-over copy, more photos, search-ready page details, and a launch checklist.

Table 2. What each rung of the ladder includes.

Delivery is three to five days from the moment they send photos and an hour of phone time. Payment lands after they watch the video and say yes. They own the page outright - no hostage-taking, no "license fees," nothing that smells like a subscription they did not agree to. If they want it hosted and kept alive, that is a different offer, and it is next.

4. Offer Two - The Automation Fix

One leak, found and fixed, five hundred flat. The client picks the thing that bleeds the most - missed calls, silent reviews, or invoices nobody chases - and Mike installs the fix, tunes it to their business, and hands over a short walkthrough video so they know exactly what runs where. The parts are already priced on the automation page: the Missed-Call Texter at four hundred, the Review Robot at three hundred, the Invoice Chaser at three hundred to five hundred.

$500	24/7	0
FLAT, ONE LEAK FIXED	IT NEVER SLEEPS	SUBSCRIPTIONS REQUIRED

The Fix bundles one part with the hand-holding a first-time buyer needs: setup, testing in their real workflow, and the walkthrough. That is why it prices above a bare part and below two parts. It is also the cleanest first sale to a business owner who is not ready for a website - automation fixes a pain they feel this week, not a project they have to imagine.

Every Fix ends with the same upgrade question: "when you are ready for something that answers every call, that is the receptionist - two ninety-seven a month." The 24/7 Receptionist quotes your service fee, answers every missed call, and books the job on the calendar. She never sleeps and never has a bad Monday. That is the only subscription in the automation line, and it is sold as what it is: an employee who costs less than a phone bill.

5. Offer Three - The Care Plan

Ninety-nine a month keeps the website alive. Hosting, the domain renewal watched, uptime monitoring, thirty minutes of small edits whenever they need them, and a quarterly tune-up where Mike checks what is working and quietly fixes what is not. Once a month they get a one-line report: site up, calls routed, nothing broken. That is the whole product - deliberately small, deliberately cheap, deliberately easy to say yes to at the exact moment the site is being delivered.

$99	30	4
PER MONTH, CANCEL ANYTIME	MINUTES OF EDITS MONTHLY	TUNE-UPS A YEAR

What is not included matters as much as what is: no new pages, no redesigns, no content packs. Those are separate purchases at their regular prices. The Care Plan is maintenance, not a retainer that quietly becomes a ceiling on what gets built. Keeping the boundary sharp is what keeps the plan honest - and what keeps it renewable year after year.

The pitch is one sentence at delivery: "who keeps this alive - you, or me for ninety-nine a month?" Cancel anytime, no exit fee, and the site they own outright keeps running even if they leave. The recurring floor this builds is the quiet half of the two-thousand-dollar month - every plan signed lowers the mountain the next month has to climb.

6. The $2,000 Month

Two thousand dollars a month is the number the whole business is pointed at. It is not one big sale - it is a small number of medium sales, which is exactly what a one-man studio in Baltimore can manufacture on purpose. The table shows four mixes that all clear the line. None of them requires a miracle; each one requires roughly one delivery a week.

$2,000	4	$99+
THE MONTHLY TARGET	PATHS THAT CLEAR IT	RECURRING FLOOR PER CLIENT

Read the paths as weather reports, not forecasts. In a month heavy on new plumbing clients, path one or three shows up on its own. In a slower month, the Fix and the Care Plan carry the number - which is the entire strategic point of having cheap, fast offers stacked underneath the ladder. A slow month with four Fixes in it still clears eight hundred dollars before a single website sells.

Path	The mix	The math
Four friends	Four first-client websites at the friend price	4 x $500 = $2,000
Two and a texter	Two third-rung sites, two Care Plans, one Missed-Call Texter	2 x $800 + 2 x $99 + $400 = $2,198
Three seconds	Three second-rung sites and one Care Plan	3 x $650 + $99 = $2,049
One of each	One site, two content packs, two Care Plans, one automation part	$800 + 2 x $297 + 2 x $99 + $300 = $1,992

Table 3. Four mixes that clear $2,000 in a month.

The long game is the recurring floor. Twenty Care Plans and ten content packs is nineteen hundred a month before a single new client walks in the door - at that point the $2,000 month stops being a goal and becomes the baseline. Every sale should be judged twice: once by the cash it brings this month, and once by whether it adds to the floor. The second number is the one that compounds.

7. Objections, Answered

Every one of these has been heard on a job site already. The answers below are written to be said out loud - short, unbothered, and finished in one breath. An objection answered calmly is a sale moving forward; an objected argued with is a sale moving next door.

> "That's a lot for one page."
>
> It is one page that answers the phone twenty-four hours a day and never takes a sick day. One rescued job pays for it twice. And you only pay after you have watched it work on your own phone.

> "My nephew can build me one."
>
> He absolutely can - in six months, in his spare time, between semesters. The question is what this month's customers find while he gets around to it. Five hundred dollars and it is done by Friday.

> "I get my leads from Angi and Yelp."
>
> You rent those. Every lead is a toll booth, and the day you stop paying, the phone stops ringing. The site is the only asset in the stack you own outright - and it routes every call straight to your cell.

> "I'm word-of-mouth, I don't need a website."
>
> Word of mouth is the best lead source in Baltimore. It is also the one that checks Google before calling. When someone vouches for you, be findable in the next ten seconds - that is all this page does.

> "Ninety-nine a month, forever?"
>
> Hosting, edits, uptime, and four tune-ups a year - less than one service call. Cancel whenever. The site stays up and stays yours either way; the plan is just who keeps it alive.

8. Money and Terms

Payment follows the same logic as the products: simple, front-loaded with trust, and settled in one conversation. Websites are paid after the client watches the walkthrough video and approves - the build comes first, the money second, always. Automation Fixes are paid when the fix is running: install, test, walkthrough, invoice. Monthly offers - the Care Plan, the content packs, the Receptionist - bill at the start of each month and cancel anytime, no exit fees, no contracts, nothing to sign that needs a lawyer.

Take money every way a tradesman pays: cash, check, Zelle, and card (card adds three percent, said plainly, once). Invoices go out from mike@mikebuilds.tech the same day the work is approved - a Zoho invoice with the business name on it, not a handwritten note. Every invoice repeats the close: call or text, a human picks up.

Two rules that never bend. First: no deposits, ever - the proof-before-payment model is the brand, and it is worth more than any deposit check. Second: no discounting. If a number does not fit, remove scope or walk away smiling. A price cut today is a price argument every month after.

9. The Upsell Path

Every delivered product points at the next one. The path is not pushy - it is sequenced so the next offer answers a question the client is already asking by then. A website delivered this month is a Care Plan conversation this week and an automation conversation in thirty days, when the honeymoon traffic starts producing missed calls.

The three one-liners that carry the whole path. At website delivery: "Who keeps this alive - you, or me for ninety-nine a month?" Thirty days later: "Still missing calls when your hands are wet? That is the Texter - four hundred, once." And to any agent with a content pack: "When you are ready for something that answers every call, that is the receptionist - two ninety-seven a month."

Track it or lose it. Every client goes in the tracker with their next-offer date; every upsell answered goes in the notes column. The list of "who is due for the thirty-day call" is the highest-value list the business owns - it converts warmer than any cold list ever will, and it costs nothing but the discipline to keep it current.
