TRAFFIC KIT · THE 30-DAY OUTREACH PLAN

MIKE BUILDS

One porch, three doors, one phone number. This kit puts mikebuilds.tech in front of Baltimore trades and makes the phone ring at 410-575-4192. Thirty days, forty-five minutes a day, zero ad spend.

Mike Builds — websites & automation

mikebuilds.tech | 410-575-4192 | October 2026

Contents

1. How the Machine Works 2

2. The One Number That Matters 2

3. The 30-Day Ignition Calendar 3

4. The Plumber Door 4

Who to call . . . 4

Where to find names . . . 4

The QR plays . . . 4

Channel order . . . 4

5. The Realtor Door 4

Who to call . . . 4

Where to find names . . . 4

The QR plays . . . 5

Open-house etiquette . . . 5

6. The Automation Door 5

Who to call . . . 5

Where to find names . . . 5

The QR play . . . 5

The delivery engine . . . 5

7. Scripts You Can Copy 6

8. The QR Sheet 7

9. Keeping Score 9

10. After Day 30 9

1. How the Machine Works

The site is a porch with three doors. The porch at mikebuilds.tech tells people who you are and what you build. It links to nothing else. The doors are the pitch pages: mikebuilds.tech/plumber for plumbing companies, mikebuilds.tech/realtor for agents and brokers, and mikebuilds.tech/automation for shops buried in manual work. Each door speaks one trade's language, shows that trade's prices, and asks for exactly one thing: call or text 410-575-4192.

There are no menus on the doors and no cross-links between them. A visitor on the plumber page can never wander over to the realtor page. That is on purpose. Every door is a dead end with your phone number at the bottom of it. Dead ends convert because there is nothing left to click. The only way out is the call button.

That design also makes every door a campaign. When you hand a plumber the /plumber link, the page does the selling for you. You do not need a brochure, a deck, or a quote sheet. The link is the brochure. This kit exists to put that link in front of the right people, day after day, in the cheapest ways that actually work, until the phone rings.

Page	Who it is for	What it asks for mikebuilds.tech (the porch)	Anyone checking you out: referrals, curious clicks, networking	Remember the name, then call or text
/plumber	Plumbing companies and home-services crews around Baltimore	Call or text 410-575-4192 about a flat-price site
/realtor	Agents, teams, and brokers with listings	Call or text about a listing site that captures leads
/automation	Small businesses drowning in back-office work	Call or text about quiet software, one flat price

Table 1. The porch-and-doors map

2. The One Number That Matters

Traffic is nice. Visits are nice. None of it pays a bill. The only number that matters is how many people call or text 410-575-4192 in a week. Every page, script, and sticker in this kit bends toward that one number. When you catch yourself admiring a graph instead of returning a text, close the graph.

45 min/day
the entire time budget

$0
ad spend, all 30 days

1 action
call or text 410-575-4192

Keep the math honest and rough. One hundred touches - texts sent, doors knocked, calls made - usually produce a handful of replies. A few replies become visits to a door. A fraction of visitors call or text. At flat prices with no overhead, one job a month keeps the whole free stack alive. Two jobs a month is a real business. The work is therefore volume aimed at the right door, not perfection aimed at a scoreboard.

Set the ritual now, before day one. Every Friday, count the calls and texts you received. Write the number next to the count of touches you made. If touches climbed and calls did not, your message or your door is wrong - fix the offer, not the effort. If both climbed, repeat the week exactly. This one habit is worth more than any tool in the kit.

3. The 30-Day Ignition Calendar

The plan runs on forty-five minutes a day. Week one builds the rails - free listings and printed codes - and the next three weeks repeat one simple loop: find ten names, touch them, log them, follow up. Nothing here costs money. Everything here costs consistency, which is cheaper, and harder.

Week	Focus	The daily 45 minutes	Output by Sunday
1	Build the rails	Claim your Google Business Profile (service-area type, no address shown). Set up a Nextdoor business page and a LinkedIn page, both pointing at the porch. Turn on Cloudflare Web Analytics. Print the QR sheet from section 8.	Porch link live in four free places; QR sheet printed and cut
2	Plumbers	Pull ten names a day from the MHIC license search and from supply-house runs. Send the first text from section 7. Log every touch in the leads sheet.	50 plumbers touched; follow-ups queued for week 3
3	Realtors	Pull ten names a day from the license roster. Work one Saturday open house with sign-in cards. Drop counter cards at one broker office.	50 agents touched; one open house worked in person
4	Automation	Pull ten names a day from chamber lists and Main Street walks. Send the automation email from section 7. Drop counter cards at shops you already visit.	50 businesses touched; a written list of back-office pains

Table 2. The ignition calendar

Follow-up is the whole game, and it is where almost everyone quits. The money is in the second touch, not the first. A first text is a handshake; the day-three follow-up is the conversation. Section 7 gives you the exact words. One follow-up per person, then stop - that keeps your name clean in a small city like Baltimore, where every trade owner knows every other trade owner by the second beer.

4. The Plumber Door

Who to call

Call owner-operators with one to fifteen trucks. They answer their own phones, miss calls while under a sink, and can price a missed call to the dollar. They do not buy websites; they buy tools that ring the phone. That is exactly what the plumber door promises, in their language, with a flat price and no monthly fees.

Where to find names

Maryland's MHIC license search is a public list of licensed home-improvement contractors - free names, addresses, and phone numbers, refreshed constantly. Work it ten names a day, closest neighborhoods first, because a Baltimore owner recognizes a 410 area code and a local reference. Supply houses are the second vein: the counter guys know every crew in the city. Job-site trucks are the third - a magnet on the door of a working truck is seen by hundreds of homeowners a month.

The QR plays

QR plays for this door: invoice stickers, counter cards at the supply house, and truck door decals. The code takes them straight to mikebuilds.tech/plumber, where the pitch is already written. You never need to explain the offer in person. Let the door do it.

Channel order

Channel order: text first, call second. Plumbers live in texts between jobs. Send the first text from section 7 between 9 and 11 in the morning, when the day's schedule is set but the crisis has not started. Rotate ten new names with two or three follow-ups from earlier days, and log every single touch.

5. The Realtor Door

Who to call

Call agents with active listings and small teams. They compete on presentation and speed, and their standing pain is a lead that slipped while they were showing a house. They already spend real money on presentation, which means a flat-price listing site is an easy yes once they see it.

Where to find names

The Maryland real estate license roster is public and free - agents, brokerages, contact details. Open houses are better than any list: Saturday afternoons are a free parade of prospects, one after another, standing still.

Broker offices round it out; the office manager decides what sits on the counter, and counter cards sit for months.

The QR plays

QR plays for this door: open-house sign-in cards and the footer of every listing flyer. A sign-in card that scans to mikebuilds.tech/realtor works on two levels - agents see a peer using you, and buyers see the work you do. One card, two sales.

Open-house etiquette

One rule of etiquette: never pitch an agent in front of their clients. Be a visitor. Sign the sheet, drink the coffee, admire the kitchen. When the crowd thins, hand the agent the card and say the line from section 7. The pitch lands after the courtesy, never before it.

6. The Automation Door

Who to call

Call any small business with a back-office mess: reviews nobody answers, invoices nobody chases, calls that go to voicemail after five. Dentists, gyms, repair shops, clinics, two-person contractors. They all know the mess exists and none of them have an hour to describe it. Your job is to name the mess in one sentence and let the automation page do the rest.

Where to find names

Chambers of commerce publish member lists for free. BNI-style breakfast clubs are built for exactly this trade of favors. Main Street walks put you face to face with owners who decide on the spot. LinkedIn finds the Baltimore owners who post about being busy. Pick two of these four; do not try to work them all.

The QR play

QR play for this door: the counter card by the register. It scans to mikebuilds.tech/automation, which already carries the full pitch - the quiet software, the flat price, the no-monthly-fees rule. The card works while the shop is busy, which is the only time you are not standing there.

The delivery engine

Delivery engine: once deals come in, the Charm City n8n factory - lead machine, outreach, deal closer, form alerts - runs the volume for you. Host it on the DigitalOcean credit that comes with your GitHub Education pack and the engine costs nothing to run. Build the muscle manually first; hand the repetition to the machine only after you know which message works.

7. Scripts You Can Copy

Rules for every script: plain talk, short sentences, one ask per message. Send texts between 9 and 11 in the morning or 2 and 4 in the afternoon. One follow-up per person, then stop. Log every touch, even the rude ones - especially the rude ones, because a no logged today is a name you never waste twice. Replace anything in brackets before sending.

FIRST TEXT - PLUMBER

Hi [name], saw your trucks around [neighborhood]. I build sites for plumbers that catch the calls you miss while you're under a sink. One flat price, no monthly fees. Have a look - mikebuilds.tech/plumber - and text me if it fits. Mike, 410-575-4192.

FOLLOW-UP TEXT - DAY 3

Quick one, [name]. Pass or park it? Either is fine. mikebuilds.tech/plumber - Mike, 410-575-4192.

COLD CALL OPENER - 20 SECONDS

Hi, is this [name]? Mike, Mike Builds in Baltimore. This is a sales call - give me twenty seconds and you can hang up. I build sites for plumbers that catch missed calls. Flat price, you own it. Want the link, or hang up?

VOICEMAIL - 15 SECONDS

[name], Mike Builds in Baltimore. Sites for plumbers that catch missed calls. Flat price, no monthly fees. Text me at 410-575-4192 or peek at mikebuilds.tech/plumber.

EMAIL - AUTOMATION, 90 WORDS

Subject: your back office, quieter. Hi [name] - I build software that runs the boring parts of a shop like yours: reviews answered, invoices chased, after-hours calls captured. One flat price, you own it, no monthly fees. Fifteen minutes shows you if it fits. mikebuilds.tech/automation, or just reply here. - Mike, Mike Builds, 410-575-4192.

COUNTER DROP - IN PERSON

Hey - I build sites and automation for shops around here. Not pitching hard. The card's got a code; scan it whenever you're curious. If the back office ever drowns you, that's my lane.

> REFERRAL ASK - AFTER A GOOD JOB
>
> Glad it worked. Know one other owner drowning in missed calls or paperwork? Send them my way - I'll take care of them the same way.

8. The QR Sheet

These five codes are the physical half of the kit. Print them, stick them, tape them to counters and clipboards. Every code is either a door or the phone itself. A sticker works while you sleep; a pitch only works while you stand there.

MIKE BUILDS - THE PORCH

https://mikebuilds.tech

The identity page. For the back of business cards, email signatures, and every bio line.

PLUMBER DOOR

https://mikebuilds.tech/plumber

The plumber pitch. For invoice stickers, supply-house counter cards, and truck decals.

REALTOR DOOR

https://mikebuilds.tech/realtor

The realtor pitch. For open-house sign-in cards and listing flyer footers.

AUTOMATION DOOR

https://mikebuilds.tech/automation

The automation pitch. For counter cards by the register and chamber event tables.

TEXT MIKE

sms:410-575-4192

Opens their texting app, your number pre-filled. For magnets, cards, anywhere text beats a website visit.

Spot	Code	Why it works
Invoice sticker	Plumber door	Seen at bill-paying time, when money is on their mind
Supply-house counter card	Plumber door	One permission reaches every crew in the city
Open-house sign-in card	Realtor door	Agents and buyers both scan; two audiences, one card
Listing flyer footer	Realtor door	Rides every print listing for weeks
Counter card by the register	Automation door	Seen daily by owners, not just staff
Business card back	Porch or Text Mike	Every handshake becomes a scan
Fridge magnet	Text Mike	Outlasts every other advertisement in the house

Table 3. Where each code lives

Print rules: matte paper, not gloss - gloss throws glare and phones hate it. Each code at least 1.2 inches (3 cm) square on paper. Keep the white border around every code intact; the border is part of the machine. Test-scan one from each batch with your own phone before sticking the rest. If your phone reads it in one try, every phone will.

9. Keeping Score

Cloudflare Web Analytics is free and it is one toggle: your Pages project, Settings, Web Analytics, enable. No cookies, no consent banner, nothing to maintain. It reports visits by path - the porch, /plumber, /realtor, /automation - and that is all you need, because the door is the campaign. No tags, no tracking links. The path a person visited tells you which outreach put them there.

The Friday ritual takes fifteen minutes. One: count the calls and texts you received that week. Two: open the analytics panel and read the top paths. Three: match doors to the touches you logged. Four: pick next week's emphasis based on what moved and what sat still. Write the four numbers down; memory is not a system.

Decision rules, so you never have to improvise. Traffic on a door but no calls means the offer on that page is wrong - sharpen the pitch or the price, not the traffic. No traffic at all means not enough touches or the wrong channel - fix the volume first. Calls coming in means double that door immediately and do not get creative.

10. After Day 30

Read the month like a scoreboard, because it is one. One door will show life - visits, replies, maybe a call or two. Double everything you did for that door. Another door will be silent. Cut it without ceremony; sunk cost is not a strategy, and thirty days of honest numbers beats any hunch. The calendar in section 3 tells you what to repeat.

Then hand the volume to the machine. The Charm City n8n factory - lead machine, outreach, deal closer, form alerts - can run the touches while you build. Hosted on the GitHub Education DigitalOcean credit, the engine runs free. But only automate the message that already worked by hand. Automating a silent message just makes silence arrive faster.

Keep the ritual at three days a week, forty-five minutes each, forever. Consistency outperforms intensity in every month that has both. When two jobs a month holds steady, tighten the offer on your busiest door: a photo or two, a one-line case study, a price anchor. The Free-Stack Sprint Playbook picks up the money plan from there.

The site is built and the gate is green. The codes are printed, the calendar is set, and the scripts are in your pocket. Answer the phone.